The Programs That Your Rehab Center In California Should Offer

A rehab center in California should offer three to four programs at the primary level. An inpatient program, an outpatient program, dual diagnosis, and in various areas, an aftercare program. That can get confusing as most assume aftercare and an outpatient program are the same. However, it is not. Certain aspects of each program are different and target different areas of your addiction and recovery.

For instance, an inpatient program will help you detoxify the stage and the beginning stages of your recovery. The outpatient program enables you to find your triggers, helping you learn how you can break through your emotional barriers. A Dual Diagnosis is a popular option for people who have mental conditions when abusing drugs. It offers a solution to the addiction and underlying issues.

The Reputation Matters

Before choosing which rehab center in California, read the reviews and see what the reputation looks like. If the reviews say that the staff is rude and that the facility is unkempt, you should move on to a facility that can offer you what you need to heal. In addition to this, the reviewers don't have anything to hold back and no reason to lie. As such, you know that they are telling the truth. You need a staff that knows their job, therapists you can trust, and a program that works.

If You Have A Preexisting Mental Disorder

If you have a mental condition and are drinking or using drugs simultaneously, you should seek help immediately. It is not uncommon for someone with behavioral or cognitive issues to self-medicate. It happens more than it should. But it is dangerous and life-threatening, as many people die from engaging in this behavior. The chemicals will cause long-term health effects not only on your brain but your heart and vital organs. It also causes suicidal thoughts and depressive behavior to increase.

If You Only Go To Events When They Fuel Your Addiction

One of the significant signs of addiction and needing a drug alcohol treatment center is choosing events based upon whether or not there is alcohol or drugs available. As your addiction becomes more intense and starts taking control away from you, it becomes a craving or obsession. When this occurs, you may find that you only go to events with family or friends when substances are available. If drinking is a primary reason for going out, you need to understand that this isn't healthy.

Signs Of Withdraw Indicate That You Need A Drug Alcohol Treatment Center

When you are a drinker and stop or can't get your drug of choice, you begin to experience withdrawal. You can go through any one of several symptoms, including these.

Do You Suspect Substance Abuse in a Loved One? Here are Signs To Look For and Steps To Take

Do you suspect that there could be something not right with your loved one? Do you feel like they've been a bit off for a while now?

If so, then one reason could be that they're getting themselves involved in excessive use of drugs or alcohol.

While it can be tough to face the possibility, it's essential to know the signs of substance abuse. This way, you can get your loved ones the help they need to know if it's time to take them to a drug rehab center for treatment. Naturally, you will also want to know what to do if you think someone is abusing drugs or alcohol.

Let's take a look at some of the signs you should look out for and some of the steps you can take to help them.

Changes in Appearance or Behavior

If your loved one has been using drugs or alcohol, you may notice changes in their appearance or behavior. They may have a sudden weight change, look tired all the time, or seem to be losing interest in activities they used to enjoy.

Their overall mood may also be different than usual and may seem more irritable, angry, or aggressive.

Having Secretive Behavior

At times, people abusing drugs or alcohol may try to keep their behavior a secret. They may go out of their way to hide the fact that they're using substances. They may switch up their routine or lie about where they've been. This secretive behavior can be another sign that something is wrong.

Entering a Drug Rehab Center: What to Expect

When you choose a drug rehab center, you will go through a medical detox program before you schedule counseling. Both medical intervention and counseling will help you overcome an addiction and re-establish your path in life.

1. The 12 Step Program: How It Works

The 12-Step Program represents a program usually followed by people who are addicted to alcohol. It represents the guiding principles established by Alcoholics Anonymous. It also is used by members of Narcotics Anonymous.

Alcoholics Anonymous published the 12-step plan in 1939 to help people who had an alcohol addiction who suffered from depression.

The 12 steps featured cover the emotional, mental, and physical aspects of an addiction problem. It also includes support from a sponsor. The sponsor represents a recovering addict who guides new members in the program, or serves as their mentor.

In the first step of the program, the addict admits they are powerless and that their addiction is out of control. This allows them to move forward positively through the treatment process.

2. Cognitive Dissonance Therapy

A substance abuse issue is a serious thing. You need to seek help to don't cause permanent damage or lose your life. This type of addiction is also dangerous as it usually accompanies mental illness. Left untreated, this can cause various issues that will take years to heal.

However, you can seek help from drug and alcohol rehab. They can treat multiple areas of addictive substances.

Marijuana Doesn't Have To Rule You

Marijuana gets a lot of people thinking that it is a good thing. However, it has the potential to be a dangerous drug that alters your brain, causing memory issues or losing intelligence points. It can cause suicidal thoughts and can cause a severe addiction problem. Also known as cannabis, this is a highly addictive substance.

Opioid Addictions Are Varied

Opioids include various substances such as heroin, fentanyl, pain pills, or other street drugs. It could be a synthetic drug that you would see at a party or something harder. These substances are responsible for over ninety-thousand deaths a year. Unfortunately, it doesn't take long to get affected by these drugs and to obtain serious addiction problems. One time is all it takes to cause a fatality, however. Knowing this, a drug and alcohol rehab treats these issues so that you can turn your life around.

A Drug And Alcohol Rehab Can Help Prescription Addiction

Prescription drug abuse has been prevalent for years. College kids abuse Adderall giving it to other students that don't have ADHD. This causes fatalities, brain damage, and organ failure. Others abuse hydrocodone after surgery because they can't take the pain. Drug use doesn't fall under illicit substances

The Suicide Rate Is Higher

When you avoid treatment, you continue to use substances that damage the brain and ensure that you can't think properly. Depression and anxiety are high, as well as suicidal thoughts. Because of this, the fatality rate for avoiding getting help is up by fifty percent. It has been deduced that more than forty percent of suicides are drug-related. Whether abusing drugs and not getting help or dealing with other ramifications from using.

You Can Experience Total Organ Failure

Drug use can lead to total organ failure if left untreated. That is one of the reasons that drug addiction treatment is so necessary. The two common parts of the body affected are the heart and liver, but most people don't realize that those are not the only areas that get involved. Your brain, kidneys, lungs, and more are all affected.

Drug Addiction Is Considered To Be A Mental Illness

It is considered a chronic and mental illness when you classify drug addiction. The cognitive component is due to the way the dependence influences you. Because you crave the substances, you lose control over when and how you use your chosen drug and your involvement when you keep using despite it hurting you.

Addiction Is Not A Singular Issue, And You Need Drug Addiction Treatment

Drug addiction rarely acts alone, and there can be a host of other issues behind why someone is using the way they are. For instance, someone with Pure OCD could abuse drugs to quiet their mind. An eating disorder patient could abuse drugs to feed their disorder. These examples have happened in many cases. Other situations becoming more familiar with drug addiction are anxiety, depression, and ADHD.

Addiction is a life-threatening situation that needs to be taken seriously. The suicide rate is high, and the fatality rate is even higher. Using drugs and alcohol affects your brain, your ability to function, and how you manage daily life.

It also changes your patterns of living and causes you to engage in unsafe compulsions, and can put you in situations that you shouldn't be in and that can end your life. That doesn't have to be your future.

Keep reading to find out how drug addiction treatment can save your life.

Treatment Can Understand Your Mental Condition

A dual diagnosis drug addiction treatment center understands that taking care of the addiction alone is not probable. Treating the addiction but not the mental condition or underlying reasons won't fix the problem entirely. It solves one issue. In doing so, you will have a higher chance of relapsing. Instead, a dual diagnosis will give you the help and therapy you need to address what is causing the addiction. In addition to this, those who attend dual diagnosis treatment have a far lower chance of relapsing.

Drug Addiction Treatment Centers Provide Aftercare

Aftercare is an essential part of healing. When you finish inpatient care, it is necessary to move into, and it is a vital step because it helps you embrace the techniques and understanding of your triggers and how to work through them. It also helps because you continue to see your therapist, who will help you avoid going back to the addiction. Getting back into your old life can be difficult, which is another reason a drug

Substance abuse goes beyond the use of drugs. In most cases, people who struggle with substance abuse also have unresolved mental health issues that trigger the drug abuse. Experts estimate that 6 out of 10 people with a substance abuse disorder also have a co-occurring mental illness in the U.S.

The good news is dual diagnosis therapy addresses both the abuse and mental health issues. This gives a patient a better chance of overcoming addiction and staying clean. Here is what you need to know about this form of treatment.

What is Dual Diagnosis?

Dual diagnosis entails simultaneously having both an addiction diagnosis and a mental illness diagnosis. Since these two conditions are intertwined, it is vital that they are both addressed. This ensures complete and successful alcohol or drug rehabilitation.

A dual diagnosis treatment center can help patients know and understand the issues they are facing so they can have better control of their lives. Here are some of the benefits patients can expect from dual diagnosis therapy.

1. Mind and Body Healing

Dual diagnosis programs utilize holistic treatments such as nutritional counseling, yoga, art therapy, mediation therapy, and massage therapy to help the patient in every area. Such treatments will help the patient cultivate other interests and give them more balance, which will help them stay sober and avoid a relapse.

While dealing with drug addiction and alcoholism isn't easy, the situation can worsen if one has mental health challenges. That's because each of these conditions comes with unique symptoms.

Unfortunately, most people don't know they have these conditions. So, they are reluctant when it comes to seeking medical help. According to the Journal of the American Medical Association, about 50% of people with serious mental illnesses are struggling with substance abuse too. This is a condition known as dual diagnosis.

If you or your loved one has this problem, it's important to take them to a dual diagnosis treatment center. They'll find health experts who can help them start their journey to recovery.

That said, let's look at what a dual diagnosis is and how dual diagnosis treatment works.

What's Dual Diagnosis?

Dual diagnosis is a severe mental illness that involves both an addiction and a psychiatric disorder. As such, you can expect that people who suffer from this condition experience more severe symptoms than those who have either addiction or mental illness alone.

Young people, under the age of 20, experiment with opioids, trying out the prescribed drugs, for instance, in their parent's or grandparent's medicine cabinet. When the drugs are misused, the risk of addiction shoots up. While teen addictions to tobacco, alcohol, and marijuana are higher, addictions to opioids are still a prevailing problem. The recognized pain medicines may be derived naturally from the poppy plant or may be synthetically manufactured in a lab.

1. Oxycodone Opioid Treatment Programs

Oxycodone, or oxycodone hydrochloride, is a prescription opioid used to treat pain. It is available in combination with other medicines such as Oxycocet and Percocet. It is also prescribed as an immediate-release pain medicine called Oxy-IR.

The controlled-release (CR) form of the drug OxyContin is used to treat bursitis, neuralgia, cancer pain, and arthritis. Teens misuse the drug for its euphoric effect, similar to the “high” experienced when using heroin. This drug creates a dependence, meaning you have to take more and more of the drug to experience a “high.”

Opioid treatment programs often provide withdrawal services and therapy for oxycodone abuse.

2. Fentanyl Teen Dependence

The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) defines fentanyl as a synthetic opioid. It is similar to morphine but much more potent. The prescription drug is typically prescribed for the chronic pain experienced after a surgery. It is also sold, illegally, on the street in tablets and as a powder.

3. Morphine Addictions Among Teens

Beginning At Detox

Detoxification begins so that your body is not being contaminated with the drugs and so that you can heal safely from coming down. When you attempt this yourself, you could flatline or have seizures. These two may seem like extreme examples, but it happens more than you think. The process should never be attempted on your own. On the other hand, a team knows what to do and how to guide you through the detoxification stage as best as you possibly can.

Opioid Treatment Programs Offer Residential Care

A residential program is a fantastic opportunity for you to rid your life of substance abuse. Opioid treatment programs offer this so that you are in a closely monitored environment that allows you to recuperate healthily from the detox. In addition to this, you will be able to manage your cravings, stabilize your body, and have a recovery area free of everything that is causing you harm.

Partial Hospitalization Lets you Live At Home

With partial hospitalization, you have the option of living at home or what is known as a sober home. You will attend a group during the day, and they have access to therapists for you and counseling. That creates a safer place to talk about your feelings while experiencing a more independent life. That plays an important

Outpatient Programs Can Be Intensive Or Less So

Less intensive outpatient programs allow you to come and spend a few hours in the facility. You have the option of a professional team in your life, and they will teach you about managing your triggers. That will help you avoid any relapses in the future. In addition to this, you can learn how to set long term-recovery goals.

Choosing to help your loved one check into rehab can be a difficult task. You want to do what is best for them and get them the help they need, which is the right thing to do.

However, before you choose, you should know that there are vital questions that you should ask.

Before you look at alcohol treatment centers for your loved one, be sure to consider these questions and concerns first.

What Programs Do They Offer?

When you consider sending your family member to alcohol treatment centers, you need to know what programs they offer. Do they offer dual diagnosis? Is there an effective outpatient program? Be sure to ask about the therapy sessions and twelve-step programs. Together, all of these are crucial to ensuring that your family member has the best chance of success.

In the battle against drug and alcohol addiction, a trusted treatment center is the key to long-term recovery. These treatment centers allow individuals or families to seek help for those struggling with alcohol use disorders or alcoholism.

However, settling on a trusted alcohol treatment center for yourself or a loved one can be a challenging process. Not all centers function the same in that they offer varying levels of substance abuse care, usually depending on the severity of the individual's addiction.

Thankfully, there are several ways to locate trusted alcohol treatment centers that meet all your needs. Here's what you should keep in mind as you begin your search:

A Cruise Gives You a Breath of Fresh Air

A cruise in outpatient drug rehab can offer you a way to gain new friendships and show you what a healthy time with new people looks like. In the past, it was likely that you only wanted to go out because of the substances available. Now, you can see that you don't need to hang out with friends.

Hiking Is A Great Source of Adventure

In outpatient drug rehab, you learn how to be strong mentally. But, taking care of your physical self is just as important and being surrounded by nature tends to give people a positive outlook. An adventurous hike with new friends can be an excellent opportunity for you to find a new hobby while enjoying the great outdoors.

Surf's Up At The Beach

The beach and learning to surf can be another healthy activity as it teaches you new skills, puts you in a social setting, and allows you to trust yourself. In doing so, you could find a hidden passion or talent you never knew you had.

Outpatient Drug Rehab

Outpatient drug rehab involves going to a treatment center during the day and checking out of the facility after the day's session is over. This type of rehab is best for people who have a stable home life and solid support system. Moreover, outpatient drug rehab is a good fit for people with mild to moderate addiction problems.

Pros of Outpatient Drug Rehab

- Patients can live at home and have a normal routine.
- Good for people with mild to moderate addiction problems
- It's more affordable than inpatient rehab.
- Outpatient drug rehab is less restrictive, which means patients can continue working or going to school while receiving treatment.

Cons of Outpatient Drug Rehab

- There is a greater chance of relapse since patients are not required to live at the treatment facility
- It can be difficult to stick with outpatient rehab if you don't have a strong support system

Inpatient Drug Rehab

This type of rehab requires patients to reside at the treatment facility for the duration of their program. Inpatient rehab is best for people with severe addiction problems and those who have difficulty staying away from drugs or alcohol. It's also a good option for people who need intense, around-the-clock care.

6. Alcohol Addiction Treatment Can Help

1. Binge Drinking – Experimentation

The earliest stage of alcoholism is characterized by general alcohol experimentation: this often occurs in the teen years and early adulthood. Since users are new to alcohol and unaware of their limits, they quickly become binge drinkers. While a binge drinker may not be a daily drinker, they still consume large alcohol amounts at a go.

It is estimated that a male binge drinker consumes five drinks every two hours, while a female binge drinker consumes four.

2. Increased Alcohol Tolerance

After an individual starts drinking more frequently, they get to the second stage of alcoholism. At this stage, a drinker typically still only consumes in social settings. The difference is that they will now need to take way more alcohol to get the effect they used to experience on a smaller amount of alcohol when they began.
