Bonding activities can help strengthen your recovery and help you gain a better understanding of your life and what you want. Entering a treatment center will afford you options that allow you to learn about yourself, the addiction, and what recovery means. That is where the group activities come into play.

The rehab process becomes fun, but you never forget your purpose or why you are there.

The right rehab center in California will offer the best activities to ensure that you are on the right track and staying positive on the road to recovery.

1. Are You Feeling Brave?

Ziplining is another activity that you can take advantage of, and it's an interesting one. Facing fears is a big part of recovery, and for most, this is an experience that does that because this is a more extreme experience. Working as a metaphor can help teach you that facing the fears in your life doesn't have to be a scary thing (as long as you are safe).

2. A Rehab Center In California Will Bring You To The Beach

Now, of course, a rehab center in California will take you to the beach. How could they not? Having a beach party can be a great way to socialize, learn how to be around other people, and see that you don't need drugs or alcohol to have a good time. Activities like this one also help fight against relapsing in the future because you're changing the way you think.

3. Find A New Hobby Like Skateboarding

Skateboarding probably makes you think of the 90s or a period close to that. However, the fun fact is that skateboarding is coming back, and for a good reason. It teaches coordination and strength, and it helps you learn patience. These things can help you in your recovery when you're looking for ways to test your mental and physical strength.

If you wish to comfortably withdraw from drugs or alcohol, you may want to find out more about the use of MAT at a drug alcohol treatment center near you. To understand the significance of receiving MAT therapy, you need to know first how medical professionals define a substance use disorder or SUD.

What Is an SUD?

When you use alcohol and/or drugs regularly to the point that the activity impairs your ability to function or creates a health problem, MAT is often advised. Studies reveal that prescribing a medication along with therapy leads to a

Group Outings Keep You Engaged

Going snowboarding or enjoying theme parks isn't what most people think happens in treatment centers, but it does. Getting out and challenging yourself is an essential part of the healing process, and it is a highly effective option. It helps you socialize and can help you gain an understanding that you can enjoy the fun without drinking or abusing drugs. It is an essential aspect of your recovery as most people can have a misguided view of life after treatment. Outings like this can help eliminate fear.

A Drug Alcohol Treatment Center Has A Gym

Physical activity is another area that you should look into, and it is something that every drug alcohol treatment center offers. Healing your mind and body from this addiction, but exercising every day can provide mental clarity and establish healthier routines and habits that will stay with you in the future. Patients have reported in many studies that having a way with physical workouts in place helped their confidence and self-esteem.

Affordable Housing Options

Affordable housing options are an essential aspect of being aware of as well. You may need to have extended care or take advantage of a more intensive outpatient program. If that's the case, you will need a housing option where you can afford to have a sustainable way to get healthy. The right center will ensure that you have a way to get the help you need without causing you to go into debt. The best part about programs like this is that it doesn't matter your background or anything like that. Instead, you have an option in place to help you become better.

Overcome Drug or Alcohol-Induced Side Effects: Enter a Drug Rehab Center Program

By entering a drug rehab center and treating your addiction, you'll clear your system of the toxins that lead to health issues and drug and alcohol use hazards. You will also overcome the behavioral problems that can impact family and professional relationships. By knowing some of the side effects of drug or alcohol abuse, you will see the value of entering a recovery program.

Prolonged Drug Use Only Worsens the Side Effects Over Time

The side effects you experience from an addiction depend on what drugs you use or the level of abuse. Unfortunately, the longer you use a medicine, the more you'll rely on it to support your habit.

When this happens, you also develop a tolerance that can lead to an overdose that may end your life. Therefore, you need to address your drug or alcohol abuse immediately.

The Negative and Dangerous Effects of Ongoing Drug or Alcohol Abuse

Let's look at some of the ways drug or alcohol use can negatively impact your life and the lives of those close to you.

1. An Increased Risk of Infection

Not only does a highly addictive drug, such as cocaine or morphine. Increasing the chance of overdose can also increase the risk of infection or HIV.

According to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA), more than 23 million individuals are battling drug use addiction. Shockingly, only 25% of these people seek treatment.

Drug addiction or SUD (Substance Use Disorder) refers to a compulsive and uncontrolled drug use disorder. This problem leads to severe distress and impairment. Although treatment is not the cure for substance use disorder, the condition is treatable and manageable. This is where a drug rehab facility comes in.

A drug rehab center offers a variety of treatment options from individual therapy, family therapy, group therapy, and so on. Below we've discussed each of them in detail.

1. Individual Therapy

Many counselors in drug rehab centers offer individual therapy to the patients. In individual therapy, you meet one-on-one with your counselor. The nature of these sessions varies, but they generally involve the counselor helping the patient with their problems or providing support to help them work through them.

Individual counseling is a staple of any thriving drug rehab center. These sessions allow you to explore your addiction, the factors that contributed to it, and the underlying issues that may have led to substance abuse.

Alcohol use disorder (AUD), alcoholism, and alcohol abuse account for 6% of deaths globally. That's equivalent to 3 million people annually. This just shows how terrible alcohol addiction can be to families and society in general.

While there has been incredible progress in the medical community in treating alcohol and drug abuse, there is a lot of stigmatization linked to addiction in society to date.

The stigmatization has created room for misconceptions and myths surrounding alcohol abuse which has, in turn, discouraged most victims from seeking help hence keeping the addiction secret.

Let's look at some of the most prevalent myths that prevent people from checking into a drug and alcohol rehab.

6 Common Stages of Drug & Alcohol Rehab

April 13, 2022 Off By LAXMAN

Alcohol and drug rehab centers are like hospitals: They're under pressure to save lives, no matter what. And the stakes are high – not only in the lives of drug or alcohol abusers but also in the lives of their family members, friends, and coworkers behind them.

When people enter a rehabilitation center, they enter a new phase of life. For some, it's a moment of profound self-awareness and change. For others, it's just another temporary fix that will make them feel better but not last in the long term.

Here are six common stages people go through during their addiction treatment journey at a drug and alcohol rehab facility.

In some cases, you may need to taper off the drugs you’ve been regularly taking. One of the most dangerous drugs tapered from the system is the anxiety medication known as benzodiazepine.

The Timeline for Tapering for Drug Addiction Treatment

When tapering is used in detox, it can take 8 to 12 weeks or longer to go through detox in a drug addiction treatment program. In this case, a span of 8 to 12 weeks is considered a fairly fast timeline. People who are older who have taken benzodiazepine for a year or more usually follow a detox schedule of 6 months to a year.

The length of time varies due to the type of drug abused, the patient’s age, their medical history, their physical and mental tolerance, and their chance for a relapse.

Withdrawal times may also be based on whether you combined drugs, the length of the abuse, and the manner in which the drugs were taken. In addition, the amount of drug use factors into the withdrawal equation.

While detox, on average, lasts 1 to 2 weeks, expect it to last longer if you’ve over-indulged, are an older user, suffer from other health issues, or have had a history of relapse. How you use the time you have in detox is far more important than the timeline you’re expected to follow.

When someone is caught in the web of addiction, it can seem impossible to get them out. Mental ambition is often at an all-time low, and substance abuse only makes finding the inner strength to get help even more challenging. There may also be underlying limiting beliefs that make seeking help feel pointless.

Whatever is holding someone back from getting treatment, understand that your persistence to keep trying, keep reaching out, and to advocate for treatment is not going to waste. It often takes a little push from our loved ones to get the help we need. Only then can we begin to cultivate genuine desire to change and get well.

While there is no secret formula to convincing an addict to pursue drug addiction treatment, there are things that can be said to reach them. Remember, nothing changes until something changes. You can be that starting point for their recovery. Here are some ideas on how to encourage the addict in your life to get help.

What is a Dual Diagnosis?

A dual diagnosis is when a person suffers from mental health disorder and an addiction. It's important to note that a dual diagnosis is different from having a mental illness and using drugs or alcohol as a way to self-medicate.

With a dual diagnosis, mental illness and addiction are independently diagnosable conditions that require treatment. The mental disease may precede the dependence or vice versa. Either way, both disorders need to be treated at a dual diagnosis treatment center for the person to recover.

Common Mental Health Disorders That Lead to Addiction

Many mental health disorders can lead to addiction. Some of the most common include:

Anxiety Disorders

People with anxiety disorders often turn to drugs or alcohol to self-medicate. As such, substances can help temporarily relieve anxiety symptoms, such as racing thoughts, rapid breathing, and sweating.

While substances may offer short-term relief, they will ultimately make the anxiety worse in the long run. It's because substance abuse can lead to tolerance, dependence, and addiction.

Depression

Like anxiety, depression is another mental illness that often leads to substance abuse. People with Patients seeking help for substance abuse must be screened for other co-occurring health issues. If they are suffering from a co-occurring problem, they must seek treatment from a dual diagnosis treatment center.

Let's learn more about the connection between addiction and mental health.

1. Depression

Depression is a leading mental health issue worldwide and an equally leading cause of substance abuse. Unfortunately, many people with depression do not know they are depressed and, as such, will not seek treatment. Instead, they turn to drug or alcohol use to numb their depressive state, making matters even worse.

2. Bipolar Disorder

While bipolar disorder is generally considered a depressive disorder, it needs a special mention as it poses a considerable risk of addiction.

People with bipolar disorder are highly likely to develop a substance abuse disorder at a given point. They often have to deal with all the emotional pain that comes with the depressive episodes, along with the high-risk, volatile behavior that comes with manic episodes.

Many factors go into finding the right recovery team and financial plan to prioritize one's recovery. In addition to these hurdles, some recovery programs are fixated on making money rather than helping individuals. Knowing how to decipher between the options can be tricky, especially if you've just started researching.

Thankfully, with the information presented here, you can feel one step closer to finding the recovery program that is most suitable for you. Here, we discuss five tips for finding opioid treatment programs that are both promising and cost-effective. Read on to learn more about finding the help you deserve.

1. Consider Travel Distance

As you look at opioid treatment programs, you might notice that local options are limited. Even if there are many programs near you, they may not be the right fit. Consider your options, including traveling some distance to get the proper care.

At the same time, distance influences cost, and it may be more productive to stay close to family. Factoring in the pros and cons of traveling farther for recovery vs. finding options closer to home is a critical step in finding the right opioid treatment programs.

2. Determine Care Levels: Opioid Treatment Programs

Consider the program options offered at various facilities. Depending on your needs, you may be directed

Breaking the Cycle of Substance Abuse through Opioid Treatment Programs

If you're seeking a way to break the cycle of your substance abuse disorder (SUD), you need to find a rehab that understands your psychological and medical needs. While you may begin taking opioids for pain relief, you may have come to rely on them to numb some of life's upsets. If so, a treatment program can help you revise your thinking to get a new lease on life.

Therefore, it pays to investigate opioid treatment programs and see how they can assist you in overcoming your opioid addiction permanently. The idea is to find a treatment center that offers programs that feature the coping tools needed for long-term rehabilitation from alcohol and drugs.

The facility you choose should show proof that it has the addiction treatment options that can be used for various addictions. It should offer a portal for conditions that range from dual diagnosis treatments to alcohol recovery.

Positive Solutions that Lead to Positive Results

Positive outcomes result when a facility offers flexible scheduling, outdoor adventures for rehab residents, innovative technology communications, and visits from family. Family counseling and 24/7 access to medical care and intervention also contribute to positive solutions.

1. A Small Amount of Cash

Many alcohol treatment centers do not allow outside visitors during the early stages of treatment. You will not have access to your ATM or credit cards. Pack a small amount of cash for incidentals like vending machine snacks or postage. Moreover, having cash on hand can be helpful in case of an emergency.

2. Pictures of Your Loved Ones

Treatment can be a complex and emotional process. Pack pictures of your friends and family to help combat homesickness and feelings of isolation. Having pictures of your loved ones will help you feel connected to them while you are away. Be sure to include photos that make you happy and remind you of good times.

You will be spending a lot of time reflecting and introspecting during your stay at the alcohol treatment center. Pictures of your loved ones can provide comfort and remind you of your support system back home.

3. Stamps and Envelopes

You will likely want to stay in touch with your loved ones during your treatment. Be sure to pack stamps and envelopes so that you can write letters. Most treatment centers have a staff member who can help you mail your letters.

4. A Journal

A journal can be a helpful tool for processing your thoughts and emotions during treatment. It can also be an excellent way to document your progress and reflect on your experience after you leave treatment.

4 Questions to Ask Before You Enter an Alcohol Treatment Center

📅 April 13, 2022 👤 Aishwarya

According to the National Center for Drug Abuse Statistics, about 100,000 Americans lose their lives every year due to alcohol abuse. Even more, people deal with the devastating health effects of alcohol abuse.

The good news is that these health problems can be improved through rehabilitation.

Alcohol treatment centers aim to help people suffering from alcohol use disorder achieve sobriety and rebuild their lives. But with as many as 14,500 licensed alcohol and alcohol/drug rehab centers in the U.S., choosing the best rehab facility for you can be a daunting task.

What Exactly Is Inpatient Care?

Inpatient care, otherwise known as residential care, requires patients to check in a controlled environment. The environment provides the proper tools and ambiance to help patients overcome addiction.

The most significant characteristic of in-patient care, as you'd expect, is that the patients stay in the facility 24/7 for a given period as they receive ongoing support. Most inpatient rehab programs take about 30, 60, or 90 days.

5 BENEFITS OF OUTPATIENT DRUG REHAB THAT MAKES IT SO EFFECTIVE IN GETTING SOBER

admin 2 weeks ago Health

By 2019, well over 15 million Americans were battling substance use disorder. That's equivalent to about 5% of the entire population, making for a damning statistic. Sadly, the figures have intensified even in 2022 and are projected to continue rising.

According to a recent survey, over 40% of Americans under 30 have attempted to use illicit drugs either once or twice. This shows that drug use is a serious concern even in the most developed nations.

Some of the effects of addiction include lack of self-care, depression, relationship constraints, suicidal feelings, and sometimes even loss of life. However, not all is lost if you suffer from severe drug addiction. You can reclaim your health with the help of outpatient drug rehab.

Keep reading to understand what outpatient drug rehab is all about.

When Withdrawal Symptoms Begin to Emerge

While the time you spend in detox will typically span one to two weeks, you may experience withdrawal symptoms for a longer time. After taking your last drink, you'll experience withdrawal symptoms after about 8 hours.

Some people, who drink more heavily, may experience symptoms sooner, while others may not experience any effects until 12 or 14 hours have elapsed.

The First 3 Days of Detox in an Alcohol Addiction Treatment Facility

During your first three days of detox and from that point onward, trained medical personnel will monitor your progress 24/7. You may experience flu-like symptoms, such as nausea and fever and restlessness, and insomnia during this time.

Patients who drink heavily often have tremors. In response, medical personnel can control the tremors with adjunct medicines to increase the safety and effectiveness of the therapy. It is imperative to undergo alcohol addiction treatment at a well-staffed and recognized treatment site.

Symptoms Often Experienced after 4 to 7 Days

After 4 to 7 days, some patients may experience agitation, disorientation, paranoia, or autonomic instability. Autonomic instability results from autonomic nervous system (ANS) dysfunctioning. This part of the nervous system regulates respiration, digestion, body temperature, and heart rate.

Checking into an alcohol addiction rehab facility can be a rather daunting experience. Often, people are scared of what will happen and what they will have to do to get better.

It is important to remember that each person’s experience in treatment will be different, and there is no one-size-fits-all approach to addiction treatment.

At an alcohol addiction treatment center, you can expect to receive help from a team of professionals dedicated to helping you recover from your addiction. You will work with counselors, therapists, and other staff members to create a personalized treatment plan that meets your specific needs.

Treatment typically includes individual and group therapy, educational classes, and other activities. Let’s break them down in detail below.

The screenshot shows the OutReachFrog website interface. At the top, a grey banner reads "Because Your Site Deserves To Rank Higher™" with subtext "Are you ready to make SEO your best performing channel? Rank higher with the team that wins at SEO - since 1996" and an "Order Guest Posts" button. Below this, three horizontal bars list "The Best Backlinks? Really?", "Thousands of Satisfied Clients", and "100% Manual Done-For-You". The main content area features four service cards: "Guest Posts" (with subtext "GUEST POSTS FROM BLOGGER OUTREACH" and "Take advantage of our completely done-for-you guest post placement service..."), "PowerLinks™" (with subtext "POWERLINKS™" and "Powerful white hat backlinks on sites with very large traffic..."), "Guest Posts" (with subtext "MANUAL APPROVAL POSTS" and a "Pre-Approve Postments" badge), and "In Depth Writing" (with subtext "IN DEPTH WRITING SERVICES"). Each card includes a "Place order" button and a "Product Info" link. A green diagonal line runs across the image from the bottom left to the top right.
